OUR CONTRIBUTORS

Professor Brigham is professor of geology at Colgate University, Hamilton, N. Y. He is widely known for his geographical writings. Among these are: "Introduction to Physical Geography" (with G. K. Gilbert, 1902); "Geographic Influences in American History" (1903); "From Trail to Railway Through the Appalachians" (1907); "Commercial Geography" (2nd edit., 1918); "Organic Side of Geography: Its Nature and Limits" (Bull. Amer. Geogr. Soc., June, 1910); "The Capacity of the United States for Population" (Popular Sci. Monthly, Sept., 1909); "The Development of Wheat Culture in North America" (Rept. 69th Meeting British A. A. S., Winnipeg, 1909); "Principles in the Determination of Boundaries" (Geogr. Rev., April, 1919).

Mr. Verner has traveled extensively in tropical Africa and tropical America and made a special study of the pygmies in the former region. He has written "Pioneering in Central Africa" (Richmond, Va., 1903) and "The Effective Occupation of Undeveloped Lands" (Bull. Amer. Geogr. Soc., Vol. 42, 1910).

Miss Campbell for some time taught geography at the Wendell Phillips High School in Chicago and is at present preparing for the doctorate in that subject at the University of Chicago.

Professor McAdie was for many years professor of meteorology in the U. S. Weather Bureau in charge of the stations in California, until resigning to become director of the Blue Hill Observatory and professor of meteorology at Harvard University. He has specialized in aërography, the science of the structure of the atmosphere, and contributed an article on this subject to the Review for April, 1916. Among his numerous publications are: "Principles of Aërography" (Chicago, 1917); "Climatology of California" (Weather Bureau, Washington, D. C., 1903); "Rainfall of California" (Univ. of California, Berkeley, Cal., 1914); "The Winds of Boston" (Annals Astron. Obs. Harvard College, Vol. 73, Part 3, 1916); "The Passing of the Fahrenheit Scale" (Geogr. Rev., Vol. 4, 1917); "Saving the Crops from Injury by Frost" (ibid., Vol. 4, 1917).
